INTRODUCTION

Originally built as a manufacturing plant for threshing machines, now reimaged by Braden Fellman, Abrams Fixtures is a mixed-use development offering 33 residential lofts, over 8,000 square feet of restaurant and 50,000 square feet of loft space for commercial and retail use. The adaptive rehabilitation features unique industrial details like original brick, exposed timber, vintage graffiti and large factory windows. With historic charm and modern Atlanta energy, Abrams Fixtures is poised to become a centerpiece of the rapidly evolving West End Beltline district.

HISTORY TIMELINE

OPENED

1926

AFX was spec built for “industrial type uses” popping up in Atlanta in the early 1900s. The initial building, a four-story brick ‘slow burn’, was constructed in 1920 by Mackle Construction Company for the J.I. Case Company to manufacture threshing machines for farmers to efficiently harvest their fields.

BUILDING FIRE

1955

When the original structure opened in 1926 the developer, Massell Real Estate Co., made a big promotional splash. At the time, it was high tech ... meaning it had heat and sprinklers. The “slow burn” construction style was rare in the South and highly desirable since fires were a major concern at the time (there was, unfortunately, a fire in 1955).

GATE CITY TABLE

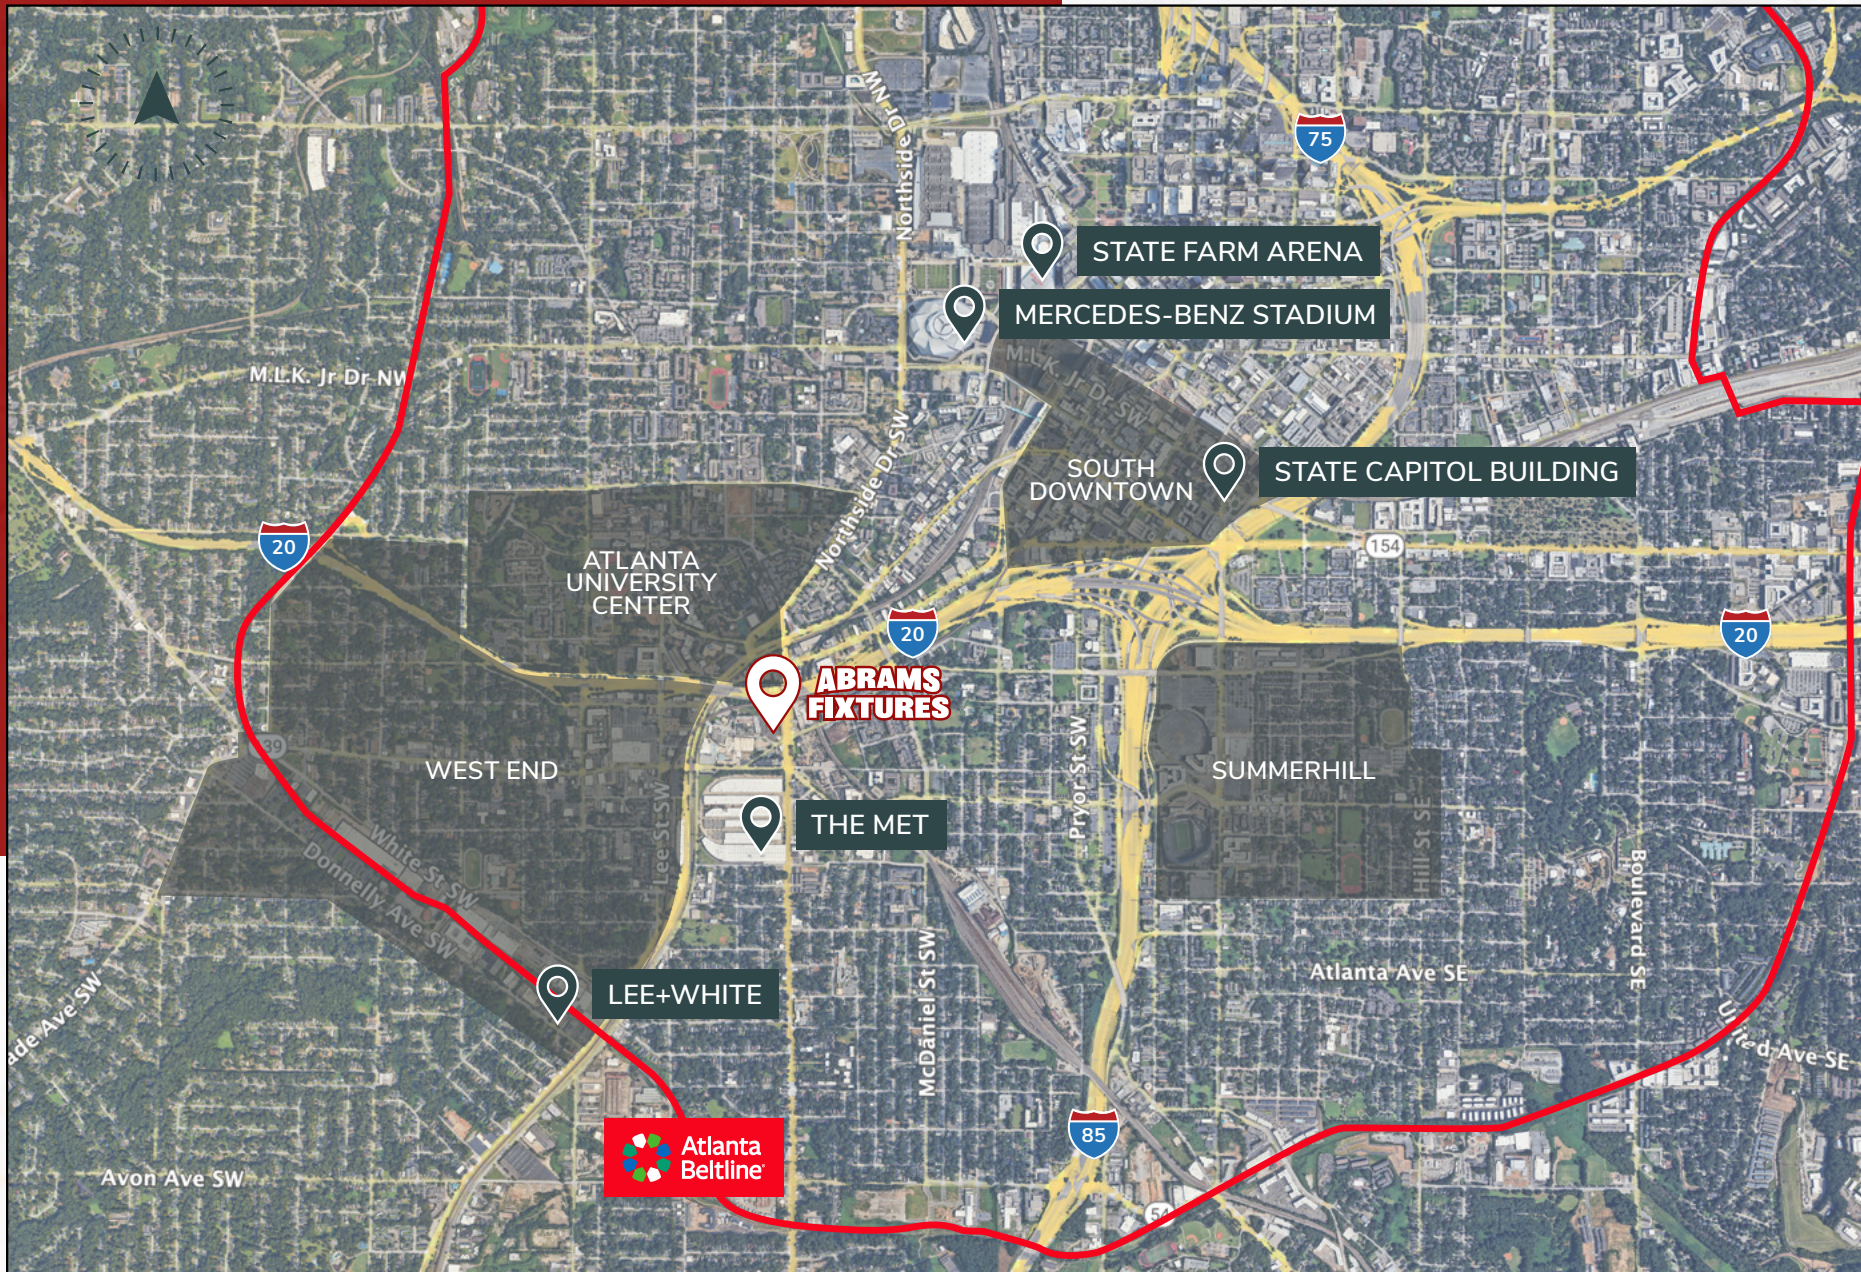

1955

In 1946, the Gate City Table Company constructed a two-story concrete-block addition on the south end of the two-story brick warehouse (one of Atlanta’s lesser known nicknames is The Gate City).

ABRAMS FIXTURES MOVES IN 1972

The other additions were constructed in 1948 and 1960, when Abrams Fixtures moved their retail display and fixture manufacturing operation into the building. They connected the structures in 1972, and stayed there through 1988. Some of their notable clients were Home Depot, Goody’s, Kroger, Publix.

LOCATION

Thanks to the arrival of the Atlanta BeltLine Westside trail and a collective effort to revitalize Downtown, there's quite a lot going on in this easy-to-access area of town. Expect even more exciting additions to the neighborhood to pop up in the near future.
